

THE PR OFFICE ^[PRO]

Conference of European Rabbis

Coverage Update
14th June 2019

Publication: Jewish Telegraphic Agency (online)

Date: 07.06.19

1/2

JEWISH TELEGRAPHIC AGENCY

Rome's Great Synagogue decorated with flowers ahead of Shavuot

JUNE 7, 2019 11:48 AM

Flowers decorating the Great Synagogue of Rome, Italy in June 2019. (Courtesy of the Conference of European Rabbis)

(JTA) – Rome's largest synagogue was decorated with thousands of flowers as part of the community's tradition ahead of the holiday of Shavuot.

Publication: Jewish Telegraphic Agency (online)

Date: 07.06.19

2/2

JEWISH TELEGRAPHIC AGENCY

Flowers decorating the Great Synagogue of Rome, Italy in June 2019. (Courtesy of the Conference of European Rabbis)

“Our prayer is: ‘Make a sanctuary for me, and I will dwell among them’,” Di Segni, vice president of the Conference of European Rabbis, wrote in the statement, quoting Exodus.

Shavuot, occurring seven weeks after Passover, celebrates the giving of the Torah by God to the Jews. It begins Saturday night. Also known as the Holiday of Harvest, it recalls when Jews were commanded to bring the first yields as an offering to God.

Besides Shavuot, the 115-year-old Great Synagogue of Rome is also decorated with flowers during weddings.

BY CNAAN LIPSHIZ

<https://www.jta.org/quick-reads/romes-great-synagogue-decorated-with-flowers-ahead-of-shavuot>

Publication: Jewish Journal (online)
Date: 07.06.19

JEWISH JOURNAL

Rome's Great Synagogue Decorated with Flowers Ahead of Shavuot

BY JTA | JUN 7, 2019 | ONLINE

Rome's largest synagogue was decorated with thousands of flowers as part of the community's tradition ahead of the holiday of Shavuot.

The flowers — arrangements of roses of various colors and pink calla lilies, among others — were placed along the aisle of the Great

Synagogue of Rome, on its bimah, on the Torah ark and between the pews.

Flowers are placed each year during the holiday in the synagogue, a square-domed building with river views that is considered one of Europe's most spectacular and ornate Jewish houses of worship. This year the display promises to be particularly spectacular thanks to the recent installment of lighting on the building's exterior, Riccardo Di Segni, the chief rabbi of Rome, said in a statement.

Flowers decorating the Great Synagogue of Rome, Italy in June 2019. (Courtesy of JTA and the Conference of European Rabbis)

"Our prayer is: 'Make a sanctuary for me, and I will dwell among them'," Di Segni, vice president of the Conference of European Rabbis, wrote in the statement, quoting Exodus.

Shavuot, occurring seven weeks after Passover, celebrates the giving of the Torah by God to the Jews. It begins Saturday night. Also known as the Holiday of Harvest, it recalls when Jews were commanded to bring the first yields as an offering to God.

Besides Shavuot, the 149-year-old Great Synagogue of Rome is also decorated with flowers during weddings.

<https://jewishjournal.com/online/299747/romes-great-synagogue-decorated-with-flowers-ahead-of-shavuot/>

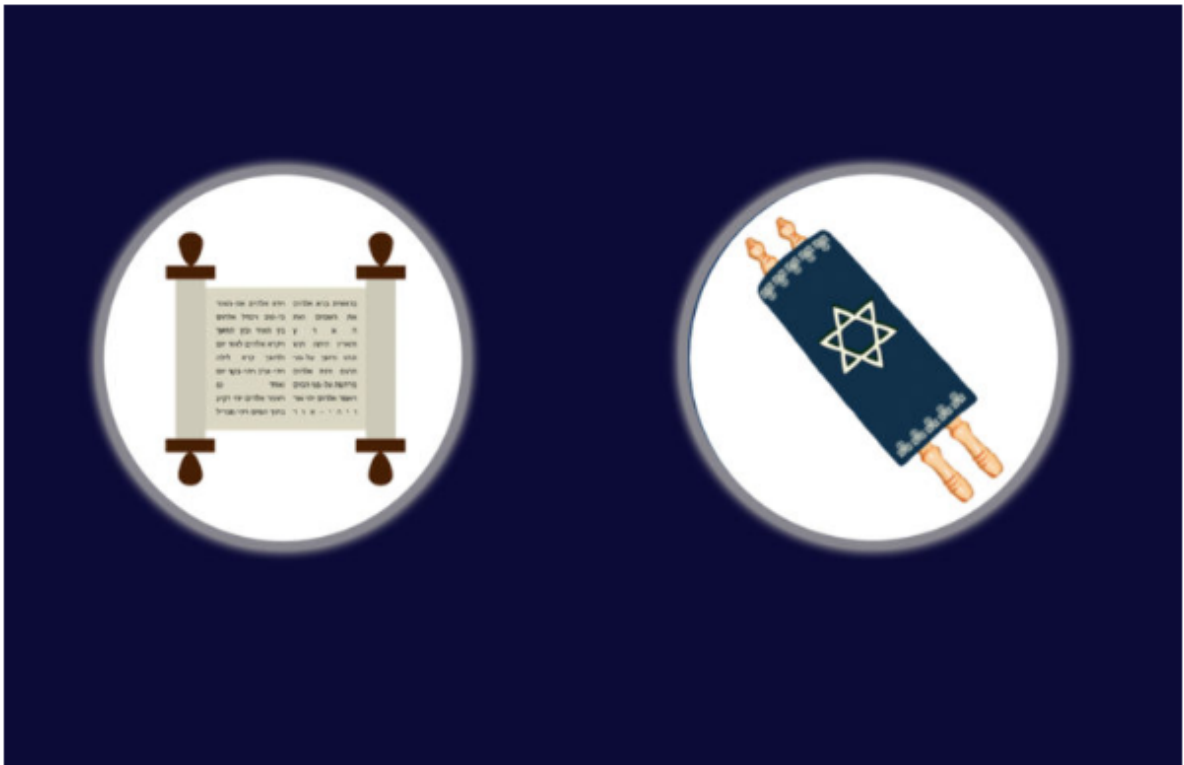

Publication: Arizona Jewish Post (online)
Date: 07.06.19
1/4

It's time for a Torah emoji, and this organization is working to make it happen

Sefaria is letting the public vote on which emoji possibility they prefer. The organization will submit the winning image for consideration as a real emoji. (Sefaria)

Posted June 7, 2019 / Marcy Oster, JTA

JERUSALEM (JTA) — Designing a new emoji is not simple.

Publication: Arizona Jewish Post (online)
Date: 07.06.19
2/4

Sefaria, the online free Jewish library, has found this out in recent months.

The organization wanted to reach more and younger people, to get them to use the resources on its website. They thought that a Torah emoji would put a kinder, gentler face on Jewish scholarship. And while there are tiny web and smartphone ideograms for everything from soup (🍲) to nuts (🥜), there are very few that are specifically Jewish.

And, says Rory Kress, Sefaria's chief marketing and engagement officer, they wanted "to do something fun."

But designing a tiny graphic Torah comes with so many questions. Open or closed? Sephardic style (standing up in a cylindrical case) or Ashkenazic style (with two wooden dowels)? Should there be hands holding it? If there are hands, then what skin tone should they be? Men's hands or women's hands?

There are already some other Jewish-themed emojis in use online and in various messaging platforms: a synagogue (🕍), two stars of David and an Israeli flag (🇮🇱).

There are also several emojis that while not specifically Jewish could represent Jewish study. There are book emojis, for example, and there is a scroll emoji, but it looks more like a rolled up diploma.

"The Torah is a very specific-looking object," Kress said. That is what makes it a perfect candidate for an attempt to get a new emoji approved.

For a first try, the process can take about a year. Some emojis have been proposed more than once before getting accepted.

The non-profit Unicode Consortium is the organization that approves new emojis. The organization's main function is to develop a universal character encoding scheme, allowing people around the world to use digital devices in any language. But it is more commonly known for selecting the emoji icons used by the world's smartphones based on submissions from individuals and organizations who present their case with evidence for why each one is essential.

Publication: Arizona Jewish Post (online)
Date: 07.06.19
3/4

Late last month, the Conference of European Rabbis called on the consortium to add new emojis to represent Jews — namely, a man wearing a kippah and a woman wearing a head covering.

“There are emojis of women in the hijab [🧕] and Arab clerics, and the Jews have been forgotten,” the statement from the Conference of European Rabbis read.

Kress said she thinks a Torah scroll would be a more inclusive than an image of a person — since Jewish people come in all colors and follow all kinds of traditions. The rabbis conference has not indicated whether it has actually designed an emoji for submission to the consortium.

“It’s about inclusion,” Kress said. “It is about creating a digital place for us.”

Sefaria started several months ago by commissioning several designs from graphic artists that it has worked with. The staff narrowed the choices down to four images and posted them on their social media pages to allow the public to vote (🗳️). The four have been narrowed down to two. The Sephardic Torah scroll did not make the cut.

The two remaining images are pretty traditional. One depicts a Torah scroll open to roughly the middle, the other a closed scroll wrapped in a blue cover with a star of David on its front.

Thousands have voted for their favorite potential emoji across Sefaria’s social media platforms. A winner is set to be announced Friday, just in time for Shavuot.

Kress says there have been some negative comments, ranging from “Why do you even need this?” to comments she calls “somewhat anti-Semitic.” But that will not stop her from pressing forward.

“It is definitely time that we have a voice and a place,” she said of Jewish emoji users of all

Publication: Arizona Jewish Post (online)

Date: 07.06.19

4/4

ages.

There are currently more than 2,800 approved emojis, and some 230 new emojis were approved in February 2019. The consortium is already processing proposals for 2020 — proposals for new emoji characters must be submitted before March 31 of each year to be considered for inclusion in the Unicode Standard for the following year.

One day, Kress hopes young people will text each other the message “Hey, let’s get together to study” and end the sentence with a Torah emoji.

<https://azjewishpost.com/2019/its-time-for-a-torah-emoji-and-this-organization-is-working-to-make-it-happen/>

Publication: Haaretz (online)
Date: 08.06.19
1/3

Rome's Great Synagogue Decorated With Flowers Ahead of Shavuot

This year's display promises to be particularly spectacular thanks to the recent installment of lighting on the building's exterior

JTA and Cnaan Liphshiz | Jun 08, 2019 9:27 PM

262 Tweet 0 Zen Subscribe now

The Great Synagogue of Rome seen in 2011. Credit: Fczarnowski/Creative Commons

Rome's largest synagogue was decorated with thousands of flowers as part of the community's tradition ahead of the holiday of Shavuot.

Publication: Haaretz (online)
 Date: 08.06.19
 2/3

The flowers — arrangements of roses of various colors and pink calla lilies, among others — were placed along the aisle of the Great Synagogue of Rome, on its bimah, on the Torah ark and between the pews.

Rome's Great Synagogue decorated with flowers ahead of Shavuot
 Credit: Children of Peace / Twitter

Flowers are placed each year during the holiday in the synagogue, a square-domed building with river views that is considered one of Europe's most spectacular and ornate Jewish houses of worship. This year the display promises to be particularly spectacular thanks to the recent installment of lighting on the building's exterior, Riccardo Di Segni, the chief rabbi of Rome, said in a statement.

Publication: Haaretz (online)

Date: 08.06.19

3/3

“Our prayer is: ‘Make a sanctuary for me, and I will dwell among them,’” Di Segni, vice president of the Conference of European Rabbis, wrote in the statement, quoting Exodus.

Shavuot, occurring seven weeks after Passover, celebrates the giving of the Torah by God to the Jews. It begins Saturday night. Also known as the Holiday of Harvest, it recalls when Jews were commanded to bring the first yields as an offering to God.

Besides Shavuot, the 149-year-old Great Synagogue of Rome is also decorated with flowers during weddings.

<https://www.haaretz.com/world-news/europe/rome-s-great-synagogue-decorated-with-flowers-ahead-of-shavuot-1.7343299>

